

C [redacted] G [redacted] <g [redacted] @gmail.com>

Re: contact

10 October 2014 11:02

On 29 Sep 2014, at 13:49, C [redacted] G [redacted] wrote:

Your behaviour ranges from denying me and my children contact, to you recently allowing periodic telephonic contact under your control. You do not follow through and make ad hoc rules, e.g. shortening the times, ignoring arranged contact times, being vague with planning etc.

In my experience your extreme work schedule compromises your proposal. Will you be able to arrange time off for this conference call? Will my children and I be allowed to use video during the Skype conference call?

The reply to your points in your email is as follows:

1. You stop your daily interference from your bedroom window, upsetting the routine when the children depart for school and when they arrive back from school.

I greet and tell my children I love them from a window. This is all I can do. For about two years this has become routine for us. Your claim of "interference and upsetting their routine" is false. The children smile, wave and sometimes try to speak whilst they are walking on their way to school.

Your past false claims have involved e.g., that I follow them to school.

I see I am used as a convenient excuse for employees when they themselves are late or forgot the children's routine.

2. Stop asking the children what they want to eat and drink and what presents they want in the morning and then going out to purchase what they have requested and handing this to them when they return from school!

I have heard some say, "Do not listen to children. Do not give children what they ask for." I however do try to listen and I try to give my children what they ask for within reasonable boundaries and my limited capabilities.

I am incapable of doing it everyday as you claim.

3. Respect the time allowed to talk with the children.

Please do not ill-use the word respect.

The children are under the impression that their mother don't want them.

The children are under the impression that it is "naughty" (the nannies speak english) of their mother to greet them.

The children are told if they speak or go to their mother the police will be called.

The children are threatened if they speak to their mother they will need to leave their house (this is the only stability they have at the moment).

The children, when they see their mother and try to go to, or speak to her, is pushed away or are physically blocked by employed nannies etc.

These children saw your employees recording their mother every time she just greets them.

A nanny took door carpets to a public sidewalk to cover/hide chalk hearts. Saying heart shapes are wrong, "manipulative and disruptive".

There is a long list of harassing, aggressive and irrational behaviour directed towards me and my children. There are clear attempts to alienate the children (that I gave birth to) from me.

You do not indicate any interest in my opinion/preferences in your email.

As you know, it is emotionally damaging for a child if his mother ignores his existence. Such behaviour is not an indication of love or in the interest of the psychological well-being of the child.

This is why I ask you kindly to make another proposal in the interest of the children's welfare.

On 22 Sep 2014, at 20:29, P [redacted] wrote:

Dear C [redacted]

I will arrange that you can talk with the children every Monday afternoon around 12h50 till 13h10 (Twenty minutes) on a Skype conference with the following conditions.

1. You stop your daily interference from your bedroom window, upsetting the routine when the children depart for school and when they arrive back from school.
2. Stop asking the children what they want to eat and drink and what presents they want in the morning and then going out to purchase what they have requested and handing this to them when they return from school!
3. Respect the time allowed to talk with the children.

After receiving your confirmation on the above I will arrange the proposed Skype weekly conference calls.

Regards

P [redacted]

On 19 Sep 2014, at 15:59, c [redacted] g <g [redacted]@gmail.com> wrote:

When will you allow me and my children to speak to speak to each other again?

On 12 Sep 2014, at 09:15, C [redacted] G [redacted] wrote:

When is the next time that you will allow me and my children to speak to each other